A modern international airport is a vast complex the size of a small town. Each year, it will process through its system hundreds of thousands of aircraft movements, several million passengers and millions of tons of freight.

Each aircraft movement is controlled from a tower in which there are air-traffic controllers in charge of all taking-off and landing movements. The controllers have a radio link with all aircraft and monitor their airborne movements by radar. Planes are getting fatter and runways are growing longer, and modern airports must have at least 50 meter wide and 4 Kilometers long.

To process such huge numbers of people each day an airport must employ a staff of many thousands. Amongst these are ground staff to help people with their enquiries, and customs officials to check that enquiries, and customs officials to check that certain goods do not go out of the country without their knowledge caterers supply the restaurants and cafeterias, as well as providing pre-packed meals for passenger in-flight, Maintenance engineers, whose vital job is to ensure the safety of the aircraft, run into several thousands.

Air travel increase annually, and airport facilities are continually being extended. Today's international airport, already a scene of endless, teeming activity, promises to be even busier in the future.
